To evaluate the efficacy of MK-2506, a new, oral non-steroidal anti-inflammatory drug, on experimental autoimmune uveitis (EAU) in rats. The time course of the inflammatory reaction and drug efficacy on EAU were evaluated in the rat model. EAAG (10 mg/100 g b.w.) was injected into Lewis rats. The time course of the inflammatory reaction was assessed by slit-lamp biomicroscopy. The change in intraocular pressure (IOP) was measured by rebound tonometry. MK-2506 was administered orally once daily from day 0 to day 14 after EAAG. Drug efficacy was assessed by slit-lamp biomicroscopy and the degree of uveitis was scored. The intraocular inflammation decreased significantly from day 3 and 4 after EAAG. The degree of inflammation tended to decrease after 3 days and was completely abolished by day 7. The IOP did not change significantly during the study period. An antinociceptive effect of MK-2506 was seen from day 4, at which time the pain threshold increased significantly. The degree of uveitis was significantly reduced by MK-2506 from day 4, and the decrease in the inflammation was maintained for 14 days. MK-2506 significantly ameliorated the uveitis in this rat model of EAU. The most corrupt congress of all time? 11/30/2015 The House this week passed the Bipartisan Budget Act, which will reduce the federal deficit by $20 billion over two years. The biggest winners from the deal are the wealthiest Americans, who won
