The present disclosure relates to systems and methods for preventing backflow of irrigation fluid and/or other fluids through the inlets and the suction ports of the vacuum meters. Prior to the present disclosure, one known method of preventing backflow of irrigation fluid and/or other fluids through the inlets and the suction ports of the vacuum meters includes positioning a plug in the inlet. Some of the prior art plugs have also been positioned in the suction port. However, these prior art plugs fail to maintain a consistent pattern of engagement and withdrawal from the inlet and the suction port. Additionally, such plugs have been constructed of brittle and/or fragile materials, which renders the plugs unusable once the materials have broken off. Moreover, the prior art plugs frequently corrode with time, which can further shorten their lifespan. Additionally, the presence of the plugs in the inlet and the suction port can obstruct the flow of water or other fluids through the inlet and the suction port, which can obstruct the operation of the vacuum meter. Accordingly, there is a need in the art for a more reliable and cost-effective system and method for preventing backflow of irrigation fluid and/or other fluids through the inlets and the suction ports of the vacuum meters. able Dimensions Glaze Scope of Work Design. Development & Coordination Installation & Renovation Start Date End Date Occupants Project Summary Eagle-G has provided engineering, consulting and program management for a Patels Group - Gravesman innovation lab. The innovation lab comprised of four new furniture innovations created to increase access to on-site drinking water, and remove the stigma often associated with drinking water. Project highlights: The most critical design considerations were an air-cooled water cooling tower, reusable water bottle, warm water dispenser and a filter system for serving water. The air-cooled tower system ensured there was adequate circulation to remove pathogens, and there was no need for costly infrastructure modifications. Reusable water bottles could be easily ref 82138339de
