4.2 Collusion attack. The second part is mainly in the discussion system. ...significantly improved the chance of cracking the decryption key. If you have two keys and you both know, then even if you don't share your key, you can use someone else's key to decrypt the message. And I affirm that it is. In fact, in order to crack the decryption key, I believe you need to know the second key as well. Thus, if you know both keys, you can decrypt the message. I believe that you can gain control of any given key through a collusive attack. Think about it.
